From 58 international students in 2016-2017, the total has risen to around 200 for the new academic year 2018-2019. If the students of non-Hungarian citizenship studying on Hungarian-taught programmes are added to this figure, then the total for all international students registered at the University is 368. This figure represents around 5% of active full-time students. The Vice-Rector further emphasized that international students originate from 43 countries.
She subsequently spoke about the triple helix model of University-Municipality-Industry, giving different examples of collaboration. The Vice-Rector then continued to outline the aspects of the city of Győr which she hoped that newly arrived international students would appreciate. She finished her speech by thanking everyone who had made the opening of this academic year a success.
Dr Dávid Fekete, a Deputy Mayor of Győr, then gave a speech on the dynamic economic progress made by Győr over the two decades and the prospects for the city’s future development. He also stressed the importance of collaboration with both industry and the University.

Following the Oath the audience heard a chorale from Johann Sebastian Bach’s Cantata no. 147 performed by a quintet of wind instruments composed of students from the Faculty of Performance Arts. The chorale was followed by a selection of Mexican songs.
Subsequently, on behalf of the Minister of Human Resources, there was an award ceremony of National Higher Education scholarships to 44 Széchenyi István scholars for excellence in study as well as for social achievements.
